Where are we now?

DC is a leader in many areas of sustainability

- 1st nationally in purchasing green, renewable power
- 2nd nationally in LEED green building pipeline
- 1st nationally in bike share participation
- 2011 U.S. and Canada Green City Index Ranked DC 8th greenest city
 - We scored high in governance, green buildings, and land use
 - We scored low in waste and water quality

We are being measured against and compete with cities that have embraced green and sustainable initiatives

Mayor Menino – Boston

Mayor Bloomberg – NYC

Mayor Nutter - Philly

Mayor Gray's Vision

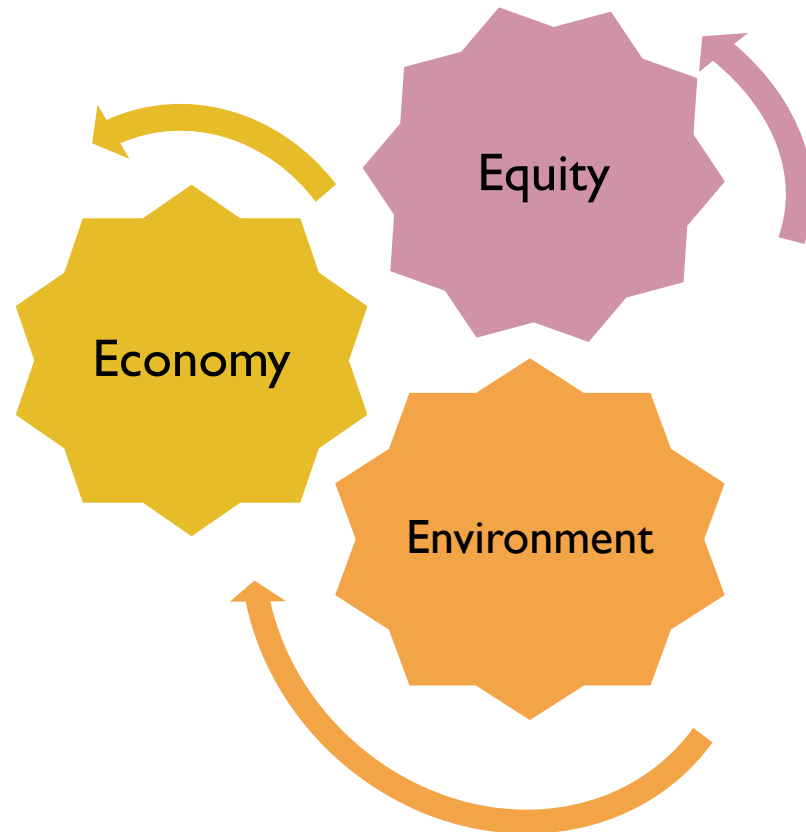

- On July 27, 2011, Mayor Gray announced development of a comprehensive sustainability strategy to make our city “the most sustainable city in the U.S.” He cited the need for:
 - An overarching framework and vision
 - Dedicated staff
 - Extensive public outreach and buy-in
 - Tying actions directly to agency budgets
 - Indicators for success
- Mayor Gray tasked the Office of Planning (OP) and Department of the Environment (DDOE) to lead this effort

What will the plan be?

Mayor Gray called for an environmental plan that strengthens economic vitality and community equity to improve the lives of residents

Major Topics

- Built Environment
- Climate
- Energy
- Food
- Nature
- Transportation
- Waste
- Water
- Green Economy

Ex. How to manage stormwater: LID or tanks?
